Partridge shorting is the sport proper: what croquet is to cricket, Thames lishing to a salmon river, or firstation to love-making. There may be reasons, and very good ones, why each of these alternatives should be preferred in their place to the other, and there are certainly plenty of reasons why partridge shooting should give pleasure. As is the scenery, so is the pursuit; there are no wild recesses of the mountains, no shadowy glens and dark green corries to be traversed, where the sheep, are as wild as Sardinian, mouffions, and the Highland oren

Under your very eyes; but you could not see outlitters, had given them the dress of blended umber-vellow, chocolate, and fawn, which close to those canine nostrils that now catch the aro-ms of a struggler or plainly as we should detect a bed of mignonette, or as the olfsotory nerve of a pluralist would small out a benefice. And though the sport and the scenery of partridge shooting are tame, how soft and sylvan they are! One may indeed do an amazing amount of podestrianism after partridges, if one has a good breadth of ground and shoots one's coveys out; but for the most part it is a sort of gentle cross between a long promenade and the real pursuit of the fere natures. Yet you see things, too, in this way, to which only the gun is the passport—isir pictores of simple country beauty which you would never have expected judging by its look from the high road; rural cabinet pictures quite unexpected, rounded foregrounds of golden arable, and distant vistae of purple and grey, with the dark break of the English woods, pieces of sudden invelinnes which, in these days of railway travelling, when English scenery is confined to a few "crow lines," may never be enjoyed except by the partridge abooter for the foxbunter. And this last here seem these half-forgotten beauties of Britain when the glory of the year is over, and the farms are only green and brown, instead of lying as they do now a harlequin's garment of gold and shooting is a kind of kid glove business, with nothing heroic in it, still, who wants to be heroic always? If anybody did, there are partridges to shoot abroad that would make the sporteman tradge to strange places in getting them—black partridges that hide in the rained marbles of Baabee, and "painted partridges" which come to the wild pullahe of India to
